

„Berlin is growing quickly year by year, with respect to the arts.

In the field of music alone, people not only from all over Europe, but globally are moving here in hopes of finding creative outlets for their work.

For the musicians who live here, it is a great opportunity to become familiar with music from around the world, and the work processes from many great musicians and ensembles.

Of all of the young musicians that I have been lucky enough to work with over the past 4 years here in Berlin, none exemplifies this "knowledge absorption" better than Fabiana Striffler.

As a violinist, she has been recognized in the fields of jazz, classical, ethnic, pop and almost every sub genre you can think of.

As a composer, bandleader and arranger, her talents are quickly becoming well known too.

Here ear and technique have allowed her to become the mainstay for many local groups.

She leads 3 bands of her own at present, and likely will keep growing here as well.

I can assure you, if Fabiana is afforded an opportunity, she will make the most of it.

I can't think of a better investment in tomorrow's music than the support of this serious and soulful musician.“

Professor Greg Cohen

Berlin, October 2014